4.  Contreras v. Davis

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit | Dec 21, 2017 | 716 Fed. Appx. 160

Overview: There was no Eighth Amendment defect in prisoner's sentence because even if his 35-year sentence for murder--or his total sentence of 77 years for his combined crimes--could constitute a "de facto" life sentence, prisoner received individualized sentence after consideration of mitigating evidence about his youth and ability to be rehabilitated.

... OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF VIRGINIA, Richmond, Virginia , for Appellant/Cross-Appellee. Jonathan P. Sheldon, Kelsey Karen Marie Peregoy, SHELDON FLOOD & HAYWOOD, PLC, Fairfax , Virginia ; for Appellee/Cross-Appellant. Before ...

5.  Dominguez v. Pruett

Supreme Court of Virginia | Apr 17, 2014 | 287 Va. 434

Overview: Inmate failed to prove ineffective assistance of counsel, based upon a claim that counsel failed to object to the trial court's erroneous jury instruction, because the inmate did not meet his burden of proving that there was a reasonable probability that, had the jury been properly instructed, the result of the trial would have been different.

11.  Muhammad v. Kelly

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit | Aug 07, 2009 | 575 F.3d 359

Overview: Habeas relief was denied. Even if withheld evidence were exculpatory, the inmate could not show he was prejudiced by any nondisclosure. The jury determined that he murdered several people, the evidence against him in most instances was compelling, and any number of the killings could serve as the one predicate killing necessary for his conviction.
